Short Bio

Mattia Frasca is a Researcher and Policy Analyst. He holds a Joint Master in EU Trade and Climate Diplomacy from LUISS School of Government and the Centre International de Formation Européenne, and a Master's Degree in Comparative International Relations from Ca' Foscari University of Venice, where he also served as an International Law Tutor.

Mattia has worked in multilateral diplomacy at the Consulate General of Italy in Montreal and contributed to advancing urban sustainability and stakeholder engagement at the Venice Sustainability Foundation. His professional experience is centered on international cooperation, environmental governance, and the strategic use of legal tools to support sustainable development.

At IntLaw, Mattia contributes his expertise to legal projects with States and international organizations. His work includes advanced legal research, policy analysis, and stakeholder engagement, with a focus on international environmental law, sustainable development, and the governance of global commons. He also supports research and advisory efforts related to human rights and climate change.

Mattia's academic work complements his professional practice, addressing the codification of environmental rights in comparative constitutional law and indigenous Sámi litigation in Norway and Finland. He has also authored a peer-reviewed publication on queer migration and forced displacement.
